

I am in support of the NCI's proposal to eliminate the use of morse code for amateur radio, for all bands. While it may still be used somewhere, amateur radio has advanced into the digital age and beyond, and has found itself many times being the leader for all industries to follow. As someone once said, I don't crank my car anymore to start it. It is time for all to realize that amateur radio has become a hobby. Yes we still are needed in times of emergency, and we are there and perform our task without flaw, but keeping morse code as a requirement is outdated thinking. Thank you for allowing me to comment.....Greg Tatlock / N9PUG